PDM-002: What Is A Well

- In an age of integrated data, using words clearly and consistently is critical to success. This course helps you understand why and how the language used to describe various components of a well has diverged over time, which has made clear communication difficult. We'll help you navigate global semantic differences and understand the components of a well. In addition, we review the ground-breaking work done by the collaborative industry project "What is a Well" (WIAW), and the WIAW interactive tool, baseline definitions, representative diagrams, and baseline comparisons.

PDM-003: What Is A Completion

- In this session you will explore terminology related to Completion, gaining an appreciation for the impact to industry because of divergent and imprecise semantics. We will walk you through business and technical concepts embedded in the term "completion" and explore faceted taxonomies and how they apply to data management. Discuss how each "completion" concept is important to different user communities though the life cycle, and understand relationships between the terms "well" as applied in "what is a well" and "completion" as applied in "What is a Completion?".
